

LocalScene

A product pitch by Angus Chlebecek

The Problem

In this world of streaming, social media, and AI, succeeding as an artist is harder than ever before. One of the biggest challenges is finding places and events to show off your talent. With the rise of streaming platforms, live venues have been on the decline for a while, and the COVID pandemic only exacerbated that problem. And with this lack of performance spaces, artists have to try and succeed on streaming alone. But Spotify, for example, only pays ~$0.005 per stream of a song, so streaming is not very profitable for small artists.

Your Solution

LocalScene aims to help this issue by being a dedicated promotional platform. Both artists and venues can upload promotional material to the platform in order to attract more business and attention. LocalScene can search the user's surrounding area for venues and events, and also recommend artists that are based in their area.

Website Type

This website is meant to inform users of LocalScene's feature and capabilities. It will be along the lines of a sales/brochure page. It will list features of the product, frequently asked questions, and will have stories/recommendations from past/current users. The site's aim is to get people to want this product, so having all the information right there is the best way to get people interested.

Software Development Process

I will use the scrum method. Community is the whole point of this product, so we need community feedback in order to make it better.

Pitch Summary

This product helps people find community in their local area. It also helps small businesses and local artists advertise and keep a foothold in today's world. Being in the digital age, lots of aspects of community and local culture are being left behind, and we aim to pull that back a little bit.
